WEATHER

WEATHER BY REGION:

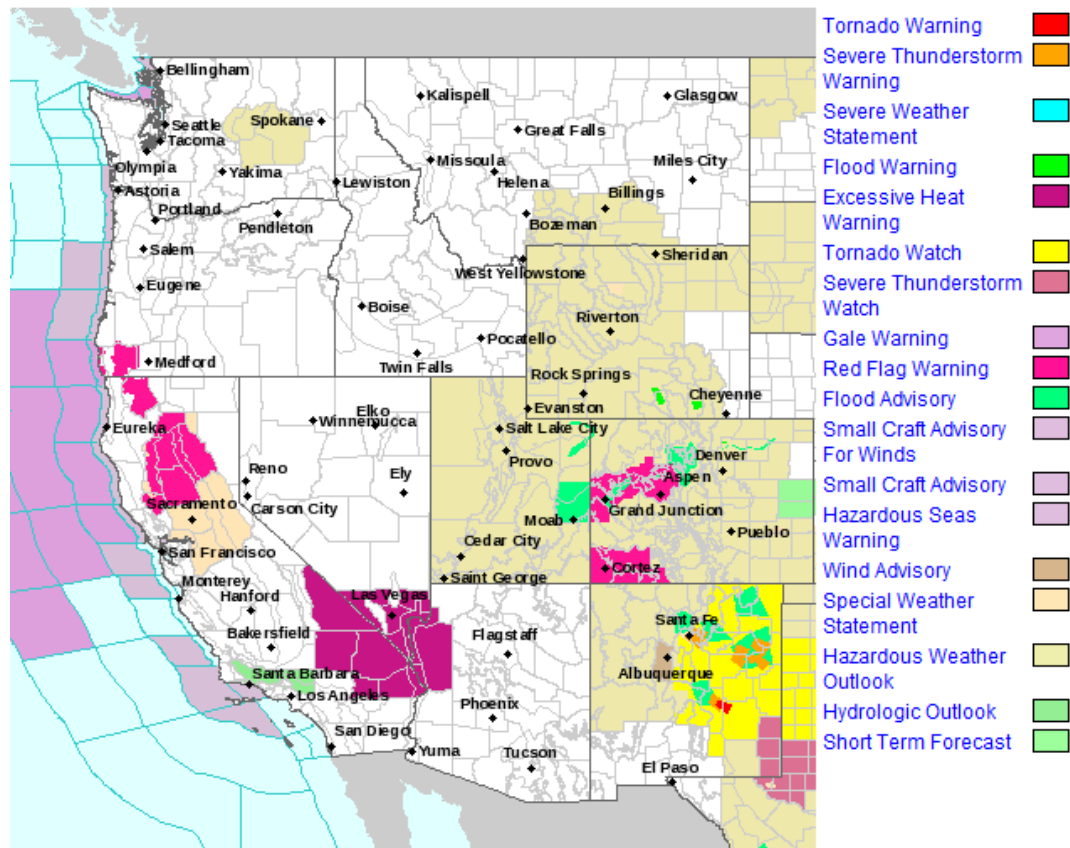

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA:

A weak low pressure trough moving through Northern California today will likely create more isolated afternoon/evening thunderstorms along the Sierra and some cumulus clouds over the rest of the northern and eastern mountains. Higher pressure moving into place tonight and Sunday will generate breezy north to northeast winds over the region. Rather low relative humidity will accompany the winds, with poor relative humidity recovery overnight. The chance of Sierra thunderstorms will continue Sunday as the high pressure moves eastward. Another weak low will move into the region Monday with a chance of isolated mountain afternoon and evening thunderstorms, mainly over the south half of Northern California. The marine layer near the coast will become rather thin in areas with off shore flow over the next few days at least; however, should return next week.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

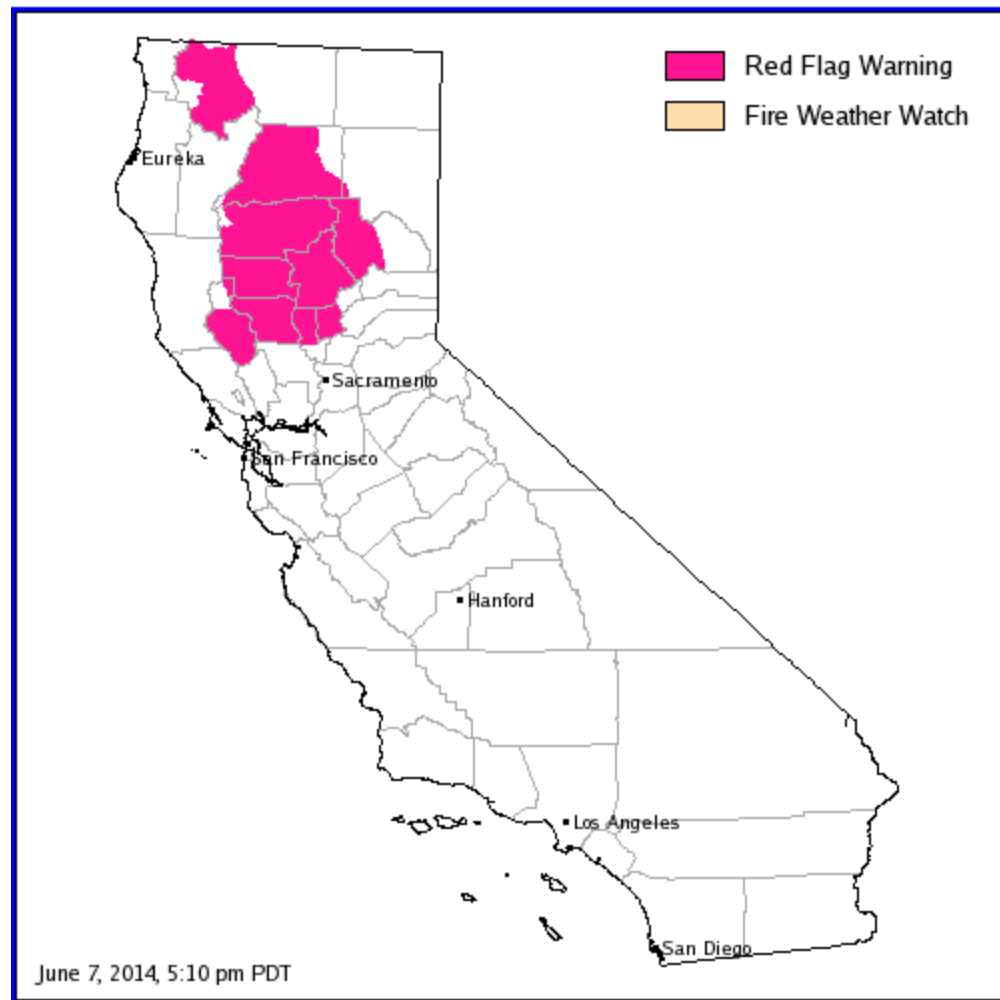

High pressure will edge closer to the area on Sunday, which will allow temperatures to climb up to 105 in the San Joaquin Valley and near 100 in the interior valleys of Southern California and one or two thunderstorms may occur in the Sierras near Alpine County. Similar temperatures can be expected over Southern California on Monday; however, the central part of the state may see a few degrees of cooling. A trough is expected to drop into the area early next week, which will result in some cooling by Tuesday. By the end of next week, temperatures may fall to slightly below normal readings as a deeper trough looks to linger into next weekend.

Cal EOC Incident – 2014 Drought

Situational Summary

On January 17, 2014 Governor Edmund G. Brown proclaimed a State of Emergency and directed state officials to take all necessary actions to prepare for drought conditions. The State Operation Center (SOC) is activated to implement objectives in support of the Governor's priorities. The lack of winter rain and snowfall has resulted in extremely dry conditions in many parts of the State. Reservoir levels are down significantly from where they should be on average for this time of year. If conditions continue without substantial rainfall, severe impacts to municipal water supplies, agriculture (plants and livestock) and firefighting capabilities are likely in store for the State over the next few months. Negative economic impacts will also result.

*As our state's rainy season comes to an end, it is highly unlikely that precipitation totals will increase significantly. This winter's below average rain and snowfall worsens conditions in this third straight dry year.

The drought could result in severe impacts to the municipal water supplies, wells, agriculture (plants and livestock) and firefighting capabilities for several months. The SOC continues to be activated to monitor the situation statewide, and support regional and local operational areas.

- The Taskforce continues to meet regularly to take actions that conserve water and coordinate state response to the drought.
- The final manual snowpack survey of the season was conducted on Thursday (May 1) and showed California snowpack at 18% of normal. A more recent update using automated devices shows snowpack at 3% of normal as of May 30.
- DWR has announced that water essential for health and safety will be delivered through the state water project. The current State Water Project Allocation is 5%.
- Cal OES continues to gather drought-related costs from state agencies and local governments.
